Abstract:

The 'There Were Ten in the Bed' book was a key tool for teaching the concept of '10' to several kindergarten children. The book, along with an overnight storybook bag and a diary notebook, was brought home by the children for a one-night visit during which their homework was to interact with other family members on a chosen activity using the bag and its contents. The activities, which ranged from reading, playing or drawing, were later reported by the children in class.
