Development and planning law in New South Wales

John Whitehouse

Research output Book/Report > Book

Abstract
This is a comprehensive text dealing with the law on planning and development assessment in NSW. Written by John Whitehouse, one of the authors of the original legislation in 1979, it provides an in-depth analysis of the operations of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 (NSW), with particular emphasis on environmental planning instruments, the processing of development applications and development consents, as well as environmental impact assessment and existing uses. It will prove to be of invaluable assistance to legal practitioners in the planning and development area, as well as planners, local government officers and professionals in the development industry.
